AOU Announces Raising Prize Value To 300,000 Yen

All Nippon Governor Union (AOU), the federation of local amusement operators associations, announced on October 23 that its prize values will be offered in arcade games installed in coin-op games, and punters have been raised from the conventional “under ¥500” to “¥50,000 or more.” Various controls on the offering of prizes will be relaxed.

However, at arcades classified as “Prize No. 8 operation” in the currently valid “New Fusi Act,” and in places where coin-operated games are installed, it is prohibited to offer prizes below ¥200 as a “result of play” and penalty regulations are provided. The AOU has not explained this contradiction.

Although the practice of offering prizes with arcade games is conceptually similar to the practice at pachinko parlors under the old Fusi Act, it had been stipulated that it is left to the discretion of the player if the amount is small (under ¥500) and need not obtain an Operation No. 7 license. Also, for operation of prize games giving prizes valued at ¥500 or higher, licensing as Operation No. 7 had been made mandatory.

Tecno Revises Mid-Term Forecast

Tecno Ltd., Tokyo, revised its forecast of mid-term results on October 23. According to Tecno, this is attributable to the sales of the hit game software “Play Station” and the coin-op video game “Galaga Runner 2.” More than 380,000 sets have been shipped in the case of the former, and 2,300 sets in the case of the latter.

A post-earnings forecast of revenue for the mid-term ending September was ¥5,390,000 (vs ¥15,620,000 million in the preceding forecast), and net income was ¥820 million (vs ¥797 million). Incidentally, Ken-ichi Nakata, who had been president of Tecno Inc., Tecno’s American subsidiary, returned to Tecno, Tokyo, on February this year, and retired in August. Nakata became president of Iulaco USA Inc., as of October 20.

"Namco Station" At County Hall, London, UK

Namco Ltd., Tokyo, has recently announced that its subsidiary, Namco Operations Europe Ltd., London, opened on August 28 a large arcade “Namco Station at County Hall” (3 floors, about 3,100 m² in total). In addition to about 200 video games, “Tecmo Bowling,” “Fatty Bumber Car,” “American Pool Satoru,” “Pit Point Shot” and “N Bar” have also been installed.

The County Hall is a historical building situated along the Thames, opposite to Big Ben on the other side of the river, and had been the London County City Hall until 1982. At present, it is being converted into an entertainment complex where an aquarium, hotel, restaurants, etc. are accommodated. The world’s largest (125 m high) Ferris Wheel is also going to be planned to be opened at a cost of 3 billion yen.

At this “Namco Station,” over 100 of the company’s Namco “NAM" are used to play games. The operation hours are from 10:30 a.m. to 12:00 a.m. With £2.4 million investment on the facility, Namco expects to derive £2.5 million in annual operation income.

So far, Namco has opened its arcades “Wonder Park” in five locations, where video games, redemption machines, and PC-based (“PC" machines, including the so-called “PC" machines) have been operated. Namco intends to increase the number of “Namco Station” locations to 20 in Europe within the next three years.
